Steps To Complete

One of the most popular fabrics to use for baby items is Minky. It's also called Minkee, cuddle cloth, and microfiber plush.

Minky fabric is very soft, and stretchy. It's a polyester knit, which means it's durable and washes up very well.

Some Minky fabric will have stripes, others have dots. All have a furry nap.

When choosing designs for this type of fabric, select designs that have solid, simple fills -- or applique designs. Those types of designs will work very well to hold down the nap of the fabric.

For example, this sheep design has a simple fill, but enough stitches to hold down the nap.

Avoid designs that are sheer, or designs like Redwork. The running stitches may get lost in the nap of the fabric.

Because Minky is so very stretchy, it needs cutaway stabilizer. Cutaway stabilizer is the non-stretch foundation that will ensure that your embroidery looks excellent, with no puckering or misalignment of stitches.

Hoop the Minky fabric with one piece of medium-weight (2.5 ounce) cutaway stabilizer

Use a lightweight water-soluble stabilizer on the top to serve as topping. That prevents the stitches from sinking down and getting lost in the nap of the fabric.

Hoop all three layers together.

A size 11 or 75/11 embroidery needle is a good choice when embroidering onto Minky fabric.

After embroidering, tear the water-soluble stabilizer away from the top.

Trim away the excess cutaway stabilizer from the back.

In this example, the soft and cuddly Minky fabric has been transformed into a beautiful baby blanket.
